

WHY AGROFORESTRY?

Edwards Mother Earth Foundation seeks to catalyze the adoption of agroforestry in the United States.

Agroforestry offers significant potential to mitigate greenhouse gas emissions, enhance resilience, and deliver a host of other economic, social, and environmental benefits to landowners, producers, and communities. It has been formally practiced less widely in the U.S. than in other countries over the last century, but this could now be changing.

EMEF identifies and supports bold, multi-year, multi-partner strategies to catalyze greater adoption of agroforestry in the U.S., including funding a wide range of approaches and strategies, and to encourage aspirational thinking and new forms of collaboration.
